

“I wonder if my discomfort might mean I have fibroids.”

Do you have heavy or prolonged periods or abnormal bleeding?

Are you experiencing pelvic or low back pain, or frequent urination?

Up to 75% of women may develop fibroids during their childbearing years, especially when approaching menopause. In over 99% of those cases, there is no association with cancer.

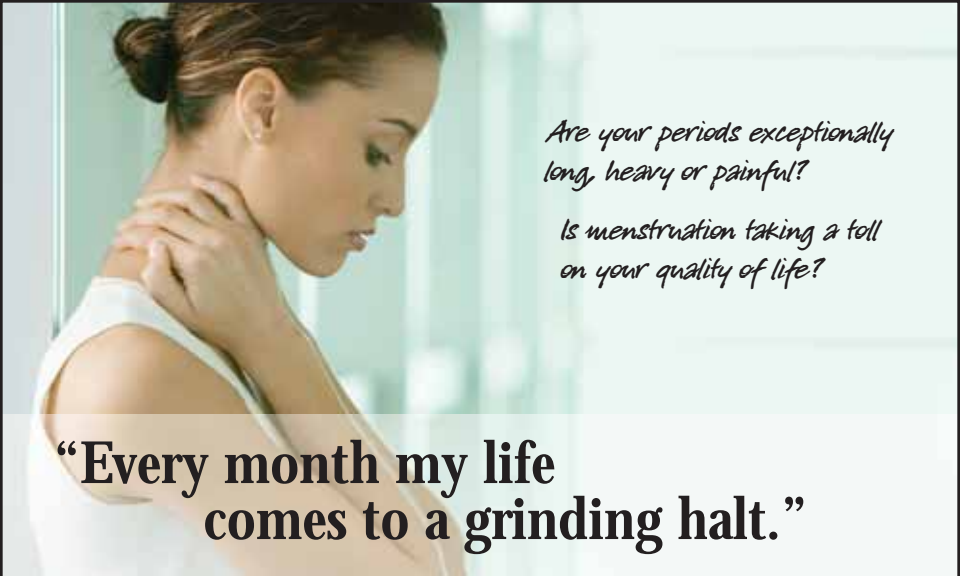

The specialists at Yale Reproductive Endocrinology can determine whether your symptoms indicate uterine fibroids, and whether treatment is necessary. Options range from watchful waiting and non-invasive techniques, to hormone and drug therapies and surgical procedures.

Are your periods exceptionally long, heavy or painful?

Is menstruation taking a toll on your quality of life?

“Every month my life comes to a grinding halt.”

Nearly a third of all women suffer from menorrhagia, a condition characterized by heavy menstrual bleeding, severe cramping, weakness, fatigue and anemia. In the past, hysterectomy was the only option.

Today, at Yale Reproductive Endocrinology, our specialists offer effective, minimally invasive treatments to provide relief from these debilitating symptoms. Techniques like endometrial thermal ablation and cryoablation can often be performed in the office and do not require surgery.
